

At this stage of my academic career, I have not conducted formal academic research. My experience has primarily focused on coursework, technical projects, and professional internships in software development. Through these experiences, I have developed practical skills in backend development, mobile application development, and database systems.

I am particularly interested in pursuing research opportunities during my graduate studies, especially in areas related to backend systems, software engineering, and data-driven applications. I look forward to gaining research experience and contributing to innovative projects during my Master's program.